Women need to raise their voices – and be heard

Sally R. K. Fisk
Assistant General Counsel

September 19, 2019
“It took me quite a long time to develop a voice, and now that I have it, I am not going to be silent.”

- Madeleine Albright (first female United States Secretary of State in U.S. history)
“I am passionate about diversity and inclusion because it is the right thing to do. Period.”

Albert Bourla, CEO, Pfizer
“Achieving gender equality requires the engagement of women and men... It is everyone’s responsibility.”

- Ban Ki-moon (eighth Secretary-General by the United Nations General Assembly)
“Having more women in company boards, in senior management, supervisory positions and workers in the formal sector is not only the right thing to do, but the smart thing to do. It’s good for the bottom line.”

- Michelle Bachelet (United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights; former President of Chile, two terms)